LEADERS

Don Kleine 2008-2009 Chair

Today our community will join over 58 others across the country that provide victims of domestic violence with a single location to access services from agency partners. Opening the doors of the Family Justice Center of the Midlands is just the first step. Over the coming year, we will build awareness of the Center, and the issue of domestic violence, through a public service campaign and partnership with the Operation for Hope Foundation and the American Advertising Federation Omaha.

Even with the work of so many community leaders, partners and supporters, domestic violence continues to grow in our community. In 2009, while the number of calls to 911 decreased, the percentage related to Domestic Violence went up. There were also three domestic violence related homicides in Douglas County in 2009. While we can be thankful that the number is not in the double digits, consider that each loss of life represents thousands of victims.

Now, with the new Family Justice Center of Midlands, our goal is to provide victims with resources and beneficial life options. Thanks to the efforts of the DVCC Board, staff and community partners, we will be able to provide victims with the resources they need to change their lives, while reversing the growth of domestic violence incidents in our community.

Adi Pour 2008-2009 Vice Chair

Finding the right location for the Family Justice Center of the Midlands was a challenge. Our requirements included being on a Metro Area Transit bus line; near the Douglas County Courthouse; near medical/emergency room services; with ample parking; and a safe, secure location to house all the agency partners. After an exhaustive search, we chose the Grain Exchange building, at 19th and Harney, downtown Omaha. Thanks to the tireless efforts of the DVCC board, staff, agency partners and contributors, the Family Justice Center of the Midlands is a reality.

In addition to getting the Family Justice Center up and running, the 2010 initiative also includes building awareness about domestic violence and addressing the issues of Elder Abuse.

On-going extensive training for medical professionals and medical students teaches appropriate identification, assessment, treatment and intervention for victims of domestic violence. As first responders and community partners, this training strengthens our community as a whole.

We are proud of the Domestic Violence Coordinating Council and their partners for this vision.

"I was so worried, afraid and desperate when I came in. I had tried to find the right forms on line to do this myself, but could not figure out what was right. I feel so grateful to have help in keeping myself and my son safe from my husband

Karen Hadley Executive Director

In 1995, the Women's Fund of Greater Omaha commissioned a study that asked the question "Can we stop the violence in Omaha?" To achieve this goal, the study recommended the formation of a multi-disciplinary, community based task force to help coordinate all agencies and entities involved with victims and perpetrators of domestic violence. This provided the impetus for the Domestic Violence Coordinating Council.

Since its inception in 1996, the DVCC has raised over 7 million dollars. Over the last decade alone, the DVCC has brought in over 2 million dollars in critical funding through federal grants, the majority of which pays for partner agency positions and builds awareness in our community. The DVCC has also provided over 75,000 thousand educational trainings, materials and community outreach. In 2009, the DVCC and its partners accomplished planning, coordination and implementation in the opening of the Family Justice Center of the Midlands. The FJCM will be the 58th justice center of its kind in the nation.

Domestic violence and abuse has been a hidden crime for many years. Increasingly there is recognition that it affects a wide range of individuals from many backgrounds. There is growing awareness of the physical and psychological damage caused to individuals who are experiencing, or have experienced, domestic violence. However, the social and financial costs to society are far more wide reaching and significant than many of us realize.

Now in 2010, domestic violence in Omaha has not stopped, but through the tireless efforts of community leaders and partner agencies, we have reached another milestone — a safe, secure location where victims of domestic violence can receive the help they need to start a new life.

A SPECIAL THANKS TO VERIZON WIRELESS FOR THEIR CONTRIBUTIONS.

FAMILY JUSTICE CENTER

AT A STRESSFUL TIME, ONE STOP FOR NEEDED SERVICES

She had to escape her abusive husband, but Jennifer Reynolds had little time to get everything done.

"I had only four hours to pick up my children and to get down to the courthouse," Reynolds recalled, "It takes about an hour and a half to maybe two hours to fill out the request for the protection order."

As she completed the paperwork, Reynolds kept nervously looking at her watch. She remembers thinking, "Oh my God, I only have this much time left."

Fortunately for her, mother was there to watch her two small children, and an advocate from the YWCA helped her fill out the forms and accompanied her to the courthouse, where she was granted the protection order.

"It was just perfect timing, thank God," said Reynolds, who months before had started talking with people about had started talking with people about fleeing the emotional and psychological abuse.

People trying to escape abusive relationships soon will have a little less to worry about when the Family Justice Center of the Midlands opens in the Grain Exchange Building at 19th and Harney Streets. The center, which has its ribbon-cutting March 30, will put law enforcement agencies and social service providers together on one floor.

The Domestic Violence Coordinating Council of Greater Omaha started planning for the center in 2006 after the council's executive director, Karen Hadley, visited one such center in San Diego.

"I started to how people were really excited about it and how much more efficient and effective (the centers) are in terms of addressing the needs of victims up front, immediately, in one place," Hadley said.

Organizers hoped to open the center by late 2009, but it took time to find the right location. The center had to be on a Metro Area Transit bus line; 20 minutes at most from the Douglas County Courthouse; near medical/emergency room services; east of 90th Street; and a safe and secure facility with 3,000 to 5,000 square feet of space and ample parking.

"We looked at so many different spaces," Hadley said. "Over the last couple of years, I'd say probably somewhere between 30 and 40."

The Grain Exchange Building, which is across the street from the courthouse, fit those requirements. Sealing the deal: The Omaha Police Department's domestic violence unit and the Douglas County victim assistance unit already were in the building.

Others at the center, besides the Domestic Violence Coordinating Council, are the YWCA Omaha; Legal Aid of Nebraska; chaplains; representatives from the Douglas County Sheriff's Office, the Nebraska Attorney General's Office and the Nebraska State Probation Office. Several other organizations are set to serve as off-site partners.

The coordinating council is funded through donations, foundation money, federal grants and city and county money. The annual budget had been about $600,000, but will increase to $700,000, allowing for additional staff and expanding into the downtown space. Many organizations helping with the center are donating their services, and Verizon Wireless provided $15,000 for the center, Hadley said.

In addition to connecting victims with the right people and services in one location, Hadley said, the goal of the center is to help people feel safe and comfortable. "It won't feel, necessarily, like an office building," she said. There will be security features and offices, of course, but also a kitchen and a room for children.

Reynolds and other domestic abuse survivors on an advisory council were consulted on the center's features. One of their suggestions was to have volunteers available to watch children who come into the center with their parents.

Eight years after she filled out the protection-order application and went into hiding for three months, Reynolds is remarried and works for the Domestic Violence Coordinating Council.

"For me, that was the scariest day of my life," she said. "With having everything right under one roof — if I would have had that — maybe it wouldn't have been so scary."
